OKLAHOMA AGRITOURISM

OKLAHOMA
NATIVE AMERICA
TRAVELOK.COM

Connect. Harvest. Taste!

Farms and ranches across Oklahoma are opening their gates, barn doors and fences, issuing a heartfelt invitation to sample the abundant bounty and natural beauty found in Oklahoma's growing adventure - agritourism. With up-close insight into one of the world's most enduring enterprises, agritourism is the intersection of agriculture and tourism, a heady mix of farms, ranches, markets, people, livestock and the culture of growing food, guaranteed to surprise and delight.

Oklahoma's rolling hills, prairies and mesas are the perfect setting for superb adventures of all kinds. Whether you're looking for an authentic farm experience, a pastoral setting to pick a peach or milk a goat, or scary twists and turns in a Halloween corn maze, Oklahoma offers some of the finest hospitality west of the Mississippi.

So what are you waiting for? Get going! On your horizon more than 500 agritourism destinations and events beckon, with plenty of earthy adventures to harvest and enough bounty to fill a basket, a weekend getaway or weeklong vacation.

Surf this Guide.

You'll find valuable information on farmers' markets, specialty crops, u-pick farms and mazes in Oklahoma, a handy reference to the more than 170 ranches and farms offering these services, as well as a fold-out map in this not-so-little guide, packed with everything you need to make your time here a memorable experience.

If by some chance you don't find what you're looking for in this guide, head to Agritourism.TravelOK.com and harvest even more info for your digital basket with everything you wanted to know about enjoying a bevy of fresh, local experiences in Oklahoma.

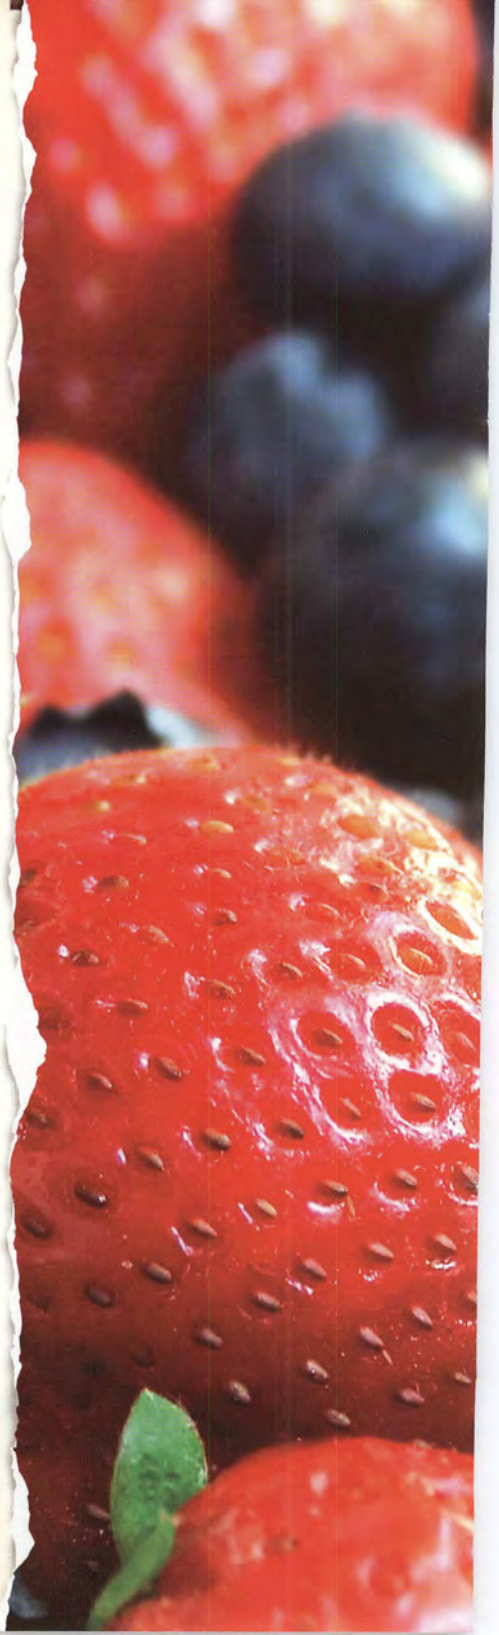
"some of my happiest family memories involve making and eating elaborate meals for special occasions. Food turns events into celebrations. It's not just about the food, but the experience of creating and then consuming it."

~ Camille Kingsolver, daughter of Barbara Kingsolver bestselling author of "Animal, Vegetable, Miracle: A Year of Food Life"

Locavore Bounty Revs Up Your Taste Buds

In 2007, the Oxford Word of the Year turned out to be "locavore," a word grounded in the enormously popular and fast-growing trend of cooking with fresh, locally-grown ingredients, seasonal produce, and buying direct from farmers, ranchers and farmers' markets to eat as locally as possible. The locavore philosophy is rooted in earlier times when fresh food raised close to home was a necessity. Today's locavores agree the fresh factor packs a healthy wallop for eating right, optimizing taste and nutrition.

Oklahoma is perhaps best known for an abundance of cattle ranches and waving wheat. Yet some might be surprised to discover Oklahoma farmers and ranchers offer a diverse range of mouth-watering fresh vegetables, fruits and grass-fed meats. From more common livestock breeds and foods, to heritage breeds of cattle, poultry and pigs, to heirloom varieties of a plethora of delicious fruits and vegetables, Oklahoma's fresh local foods are abound to rev up your taste buds.



Jammin' Affairs

Ready to dive into what makes a community tick and get festive, all at the same time? Farmers' markets and u-pick farms are frequently friendly community affairs where more than just the produce is delicious and local. Live local music, home-baked goods, jams and jellies and artists of all kinds displaying vibrant crafts and art work are often available alongside mounds of fresh produce. And as an added bonus, you'll get a sense for the fabric of a community.

The breadth and depth of produce at farmers' markets and u-pick farms is truly astounding – everything from apples to eggplants, potatoes to watermelons, carrots to blackberries, may be found in season. And with today's inventive techniques for extending the growing season, you may find fresh produce at some markets during offseason as well.

Whatever the season, you'll want to take an extra-large harvest basket or bag to carry all the delectable goodies for your own bountiful feast. More information on produce availability is found at www.okfarmersmarket.org.

"I've traveled some around the world and nothing better expresses the essential reality of a time and a place than a farmers' market, where you can see for yourself what's on the offer from the slowly turning lazy susan of the seasons – to steal a phrase from the poet John Hollander. We help ourselves, know that we, too, are elements of an ever-changing edible landscape."

~ Alice Waters

Take Your Pick!

The warm smell of earth and sun-kissed days are the perfect backdrops for ample pleasures found at u-pick farms across Oklahoma. Bite into a luscious peach or juicy blackberry you plucked moments before and it's no longer a mystery why fresh is best.

Picking your own blueberries, peaches, corn, green beans and more is easy, even if you've never picked a vegetable or piece of fruit. Most farms are more than happy to give you a few quick tips about the particular crop you're picking and how to pick it, and may even offer advice on how best to prepare, eat or store your hand-picked bounty.

To make taking your pick easy as pie – just follow these few quick tips before you head out for your picking adventure.

1. Always call before heading to a u-pick farm. Produce is affected by weather and farm conditions can change rapidly.
2. For the best chance of picking plenty of produce in pleasant conditions, consider going early in the day, before crowds hit the fields and heat is more intense.
3. Call ahead to ask about picking containers. While most farms furnish picking containers, there's usually a charge for them, and while some farms allow you to bring your own, they may want to weigh them before you start picking. If you do use your own containers, different containers work best for different produce, so if you're picking a variety, take a variety -- baskets, plastic dishpans, cloth bags and smaller plastic storage containers are versatile.
4. Since some freshly picked produce can deteriorate rapidly once picked, if you plan to be gone most of the day, a cooler with ice will help keep your bounty nice and cool. Parking in shade, if available, helps too.
5. A good supply of drinking water, snacks or a picnic lunch, sunscreen and hat are essentials. Old shoes and clothes keep you comfortable and you don't have to worry about getting muddy or wet. Insect repellant can really come in handy.
6. Don't forget a camera to capture the memories!

"Better than any argument is to rise at dawn and pick dew-wet red berries in a cup."
~Wendell Berry
