

Our primary goal is to achieve functionality and independence

The kids that come to us for treatment face big challenges that may begin at birth and usually continue throughout their lives.

We may not be able to eliminate these challenges, but we can help find ways to meet and overcome them.

Children who come to our hospital are evaluated and treated by a team of pediatricians and pediatric specialists; physical, occupational and speech-language therapists; a dietitian, registered nurses and LPN's; a pediatric psychologist; and direct care specialists who focus on discovering what the child can do, rather than what the child cannot do.

Everything we do at the McCarty Center is about two things: creative problem solving and adaptation. Our staff works to creatively solve some of the challenges that stand in the way of patients and then adapt the tools and their environment so they can achieve their highest level of functionality and independence.
